DANNON COX

BIOGRAPHY

For more than 20 years, Dannon Cox has blended digital media, pedagogy, and public health to create innovative learning experiences and research that drive meaningful changes through storytelling and media. With a background in media production and research methods, Dannon specializes in digital media pedagogies, instructional design, and community health initiatives.

After years as a freelance media producer and consultant for businesses, nonprofits, and academic institutions, Dannon Cox transitioned into academia, where they now serve as an Assistant Professor in the Department of Community Health Education at the Colorado School of Public Health at the University of Northern Colorado. Their research focuses on public health education, digital media, and engaged pedagogy, with an emphasis on rural and youth community programming.

Dannon has led research evaluating professional development programs for health educators, developed free online learning content as an instructional designer, and guided students in designing public health programming.

Passionate about creating engaging and accessible learning experiences using technology such as video, podcasts, and artificial intelligence, Dannon is dedicated to helping the next generation of public health leaders integrate innovative methodologies into their practice.
